Motorcycle futures market overview

Moving into the last quarter of the year, globally the economic problems with many causes are still evident, but domestically in some respects the initial projections for inflation and rate rises in the UK are currently not looking as bad. But in what a sailor would describe as a confused sea, there are different things been thrown from many directions. Over the last month Sterling has come under some pressure and in the past has seen increased buying from Eurozone dealers when in this position. Over the last decade or so this has been the reason why used prices in the UK have been in the ascendancy as stock levels have reduced. Although the amount leaving the country have reduced to a certain extent it is none the less still happening, as is evident from continuing problems reported by trade buyers and relayed in these commentaries. The trepidation caused by uncertainty that stifles spending is still with us and looks to be increasing, but with a combination of lower stock availability in both new and used markets combined with little signs or any large shift in demand in our market at the moment. Even if short term the market does see pressure on new sales in a downward direction, remember that this product is predicting values for the future and even if registrations suffer over the next year, that will only compound the problem of used machine availability a couple or three years down the line when exiting any potential recession. With that in mind, residuals are still being reported as strong.
